TOP 3 attractions

Tát

Between Esztergom and Tát lies the Danube paradise, the Tát Islands, which is still known mainly by water tourists. The Tāti archipelago consists of three large islands – Tāti, Nyáros, Körtvélyes and the variable Csitris – and most of the area is considered a floodplain. The archipelago was declared a nature reserve in 2020, and the Danube-Ipoly National Park, which is responsible for its development, is doing much to restore the area's native aquatic fauna and biodiversity. If you want to explore the Tāti Islands by bike, start from the west side, as you can reach the island from here via the Little Danube Dam.

Bajót (Péliföldszentkereszt)

Péliföldszentkereszt, part of Bajót, has long been a well-known pilgrimage destination. The Baroque church of the settlement was built in 1735 by Prince Imre Eszterházy, who was the one who declared Péliföldszentkereszt a pilgrimage site. The pride of the village is the Holy Cross oracle, the authenticity of which has been certified by Pope Benedict XIV.

Mogyorósbánya

The National Blue Trail passes through Mogyorósbánya, but the surrounding area offers excellent cycling opportunities. It is worth climbing up the side of the hill next to the village, as the sharp, heavily indented rock face offers a magical panorama of the Gerecse mountain range, as well as the neighbouring Pilis, the Buda Hills, the Börzsöny and the Mountains of Kováčov (Chl'aba) on the Slovak side.

+ 1 tip

If you have time, take a short detour to the cellar row in Tokod under the rocks of Mogyorósbánya on the National Blue Route. The hillside's charming press houses and cellars are open to the public at the beginning of summer as part of the Open Cellars event in Tokod, but the valley is the perfect place to break up your cycling with a picnic or wine tasting.
